

Seamus

...just before the shadows across the valley disappeared, Seamus opened the barbershop doors.

He fell into the profession by accident. Born in Ireland, 1855, during the remaining days of the Potato Famine. Seamus fought for survival until he jumped at a chance to immigrate across the Atlantic. During the leg of the journey at New York City he helped unfortunate immigrants suffering from lice pass through customs by shaving and cleaning their scalps. The skill came naturally. He used it to work his way west, ultimately inheriting the barbershop in Independence...
